

Artificial Intelligence (AI) is a field of computer science concerned with building machines that can perform tasks requiring human intelligence. Examples include language understanding, reasoning, learning, and problem solving. Machine Learning is a subset of AI that uses data and algorithms to mimic the way humans learn. Deep Learning is a type of machine learning that uses neural networks with many layers to find patterns in data. Common applications include speech recognition, image classification, and recommendation systems.